Peter Cook was an officer in the Royal Marines for 24 years and spent a significant part of his career involved in aspects of maritime security from maritime counter terrorism to formulating counter piracy policy and procedures. On leaving the Corps he managed the London office of a hedge fund company, which set up the first hedge fund in Dubai. He then moved into the security sector and after a short period moved into maritime security.

Peter is a founding member of the Security Association for the Maritime Industry (SAMI) which is designed to act as the maritime security industry's regulatory body. He is also the Chairman of the Maritime Security Review (MSR) which is the first media platform to provide authoritative information across the spectrum of maritime security around the globe. Peter has also written a number of articles and appeared on television commenting on maritime security issues and has lectured on maritime security at Greenwich University.
